The West Highland Way

When it was formally opened in 1980, the West Highland Way became the first officially designated Long Distance Route in Scotland. Since then, it has been enjoyed by tens of thousands of walkers every year. They have followed this challenging route from its starting point in Milngavie, on the outskirts of Glasgow, through the dramatic transition from lowland to highland scenery, to its northern terminus in Fort William at the foot of Scotland's highest mountain.

The popularity of the Way demands constant attention and investment to keep the path at the high standard expected by the walkers of such an important route. [...]

The family of Long Distance Routes is still growing. At the time of writing, an extension to the Speyside Way has just been opened, providing a route all the way from Buckie to Aviemore. The Great Glen Way is also currently under development with completion and opening planned for 2002. Very soon walkers will be able to continue on from the West Highland Way, through Fort William, and on to Inverness – now there's an even greater challenge.
